Is It Good for Primary School Students to Have Smartphones?

Nowadays, smartphones are commonly used among primary school students. Over the past few years, there has been much debate about whether it is good for youngsters to have smartphones. Some people, especially parents, may think that smartphones have a lot of bad effects on their kids. However, I think it is good to have smartphones and below are a few reasons to support my point of view.

Firstly, it provides parents with the peace of mind as they can easily reach their kids. Some students may need to go to school or go back home by themselves since their parents do not have time to pick them up. If students have smartphones, they can call their parents whenever they have problems on their way and their parents would be able to provide them with help.

Secondly, it allows students to communicate with their classmates more effectively as others can reply promptly. Students always need to do group projects. With the help of smartphones, they can share their ideas and have group discussions through applications like Whatsapp. They can also discuss about the problems they have with their homework using such applications too.

Last but not least, the easy and quick access of information from smartphones provides the students an easy way to learn. Not only can they surf the Internet to find the information they need easily, they can also find the meaning of difficult words conveniently. They can also learn in a fun way by playing some educational games.

Some people may think that having smartphones will hinder students' learning, but if they can limit themselves of using smartphones in a proper way, smartphones can actually be a good tool for learning.

In conclusion, smartphones are convenient and they benefit to our everyday lives. Therefore, it is good for primary school students to have smartphones.
